

Memory and paper is the real operating system

Staff are forced to improvise and work around the systems. They fill the gaps themselves, chasing updates across systems and physically around the hotel, relying on informal coordination, Post-its, and memory to keep requests from falling through.

The result is a team that is constantly catching up. Promises made by one shift are invisible to the next. Guest preferences logged in one system never reach the person who needs them. Requests fall through the gap between departments, teams, and staff.